Ir was about 1784 that the first attempts at forgery on a tremendous scale were discovered by the bank. A rogue of genius, generally known from his favorite disguise as "Old Patch," by a long series of forgeries secured a sum of more than £200,000. He was the son of an old clothes' man in Monmouth street; and had been a lottery-office keeper, stockbroker, and gambler. At one time he was a partner with Foote, the celebrated comedian, in a brewery. He made his own ink, manufactured his own paper, and with a private press worked off his own notes. His mistress was his only confidante. His disguises were numerous and perfect. His servants or boys, hired from the street, always presented the forged notes. When seized and thrown into prison, Old Patch hung himself in his cell.

I worship hash this way better'n any other. I have seen hash myself that I had my doubts about, but I eat it-and still live. I love hash-from principle-and this is my rule. I watch the landlady, and if she eats it, I take "some more hash." This is what makes me so popular at all boarding houses where I live .-BILLINGS.
